Convocation Participants

Addie Louise Barch is the second of Holly and David Barch's seven children. Now graduating with a double major in philosophy and Arabic language, she started at BYU in 2016 before deferring to serve a full-time mission in Melbourne, Australia. She met her husband and best friend, Brady Turpin, in her first Arabic class after her mission. Last semester, they competed together on BYU's Arabic debate team in the US Arabic debate national championship. Barch is a Thomas S. Monson scholar and a recipient of the Excellence in Philosophy Scholarship.

Devin Glenn, an interdisciplinary humanities major with minors in Chinese and international cinema studies, is from Pleasant Grove, Utah. Glenn has served as Chinese Club president at BYU, works as a projectionist and podcast producer for International Cinema, and has been a TA for the Humanities of East Asia course for three years. He will be attending the University of Southern California this fall, where he will pursue an MA in film studies.

Jenna Knaupp is a public relations major in the College of Fine Arts and Communications, with a minor in civic engagement leadership. She is from Forest Grove, Oregon, and works as an internal news writer for University Communications, where she writes articles for BYU News and helps with email marketing. She plans to work as an FSY counselor for the summer and then transition into full-time work in another industry. After a year of experience, she hopes to return to campus and pursue a master's degree in mass communications.

Alyssa Carman McKinnon is a Korean language major, and her favorite hobby lately is listening to the escape stories of North Koreans on YouTube and then summarizing them in English. McKinnon credits her high school Chinese teacher and classmates for her love of Asian languages: her teacher for the language and her classmates for getting her hooked on all things Korean. She speaks both Mandarin and Korean, and after graduation she looks forward to learning Latin. McKinnon's goal is to become a translator specializing in the economy and North Korea. She and her husband love playing games and speaking Korean together, and they seek to use every blessing given to them to serve God and those around them.

Jacqueline Zickella is graduating in French while also having completed all pre-medical coursework. She is applying to medical school. She has worked for four years as a research assistant with University of Utah Health, the Mayo Clinic, and the French National Institute of Health and Medical Research in several fields, including anesthesiology, internal medicine, and epidemiology. During her undergraduate studies, she completed two internships in France, with the Catholic University of Lille and with the National Institute of Health. Zickella is a member of the Pi Delta Phi National French Honor Society and has served as the vice president of the BYU Pre-Medical Club. She values an education in the humanities and believes it is our duty to offer these perspectives, values, and skills to our fellows in all fields.

Graduation Speaker

Dana S. Bourgerie is a professor of Chinese and linguistics in the Department of Asian and Near Eastern Languages. He earned his PhD in East Asian languages from the Ohio State University and taught one year at his alma mater before arriving at BYU. He has been a Fulbright Scholar at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, a visiting lecturer at City University of Hong Kong, and a visiting professor at Pāññāsāstra University of Cambodia. He was also an honorary professor in the Overseas Education College at Nanjing University, China.

Professor Bourgerie's research interests are in sociolinguistics, Chinese dialects, and language acquisition. He is currently researching the language of the Chinese diaspora in Southeast Asia and nonstandard varieties of Chinese. He is a past president of the Chinese Language Teachers Association and was the founding director of the Chinese Flagship Center at BYU. He is currently the editor of Chinese as a Second Language. He also directs the Cantonese Language Association and the Cambodian Oral History Project. He has a passion for language learning and has studied French, Russian, Japanese, Tibetan, and Khmer.

Professor Bourgerie is married to Kathryn Anderson Bourgerie. They have four daughters and three grandchildren. He enjoys cycling, hiking, traveling, and building things.
